In recent years there have been many more applicants than places available. The process of selection is difficult, time-consuming, and not infallible. Our object is to find those who will either gain most from the College or contribute most to it. The College is permitted to have in residence only a small number from institutions other than the University of Sydney. In relation to the section “Previous association with College”, we should like to make it clear that, although we are interested in whether any applicant has a family connection with St Andrew’s, such a connection is neither necessary nor sufficient for gaining the offer of a place in College.

Not everyone is well-suited to life in a vigorous and predominantly youthful College community. Colleges are not clinics, and they are not good places for the insecure or emotionally disturbed. Neither are they boarding schools under strict supervision. Our emphasis is rather on encouraging adult responsibility and self-discipline. The College wants to help people develop towards their ideals; it does not usually expect to find them fully-formed. An ideal St Andrew’s student would have a willingness to undertake responsibility in the College, and an interest in actively promoting the welfare of other people.
